I really just wanted an informal conversation for my sanity. I feel as though I've tried and apparently failed at doing what was requested of me from Will, and I'm not really sure of the status of anything at the moment. I have spoken to Will at length about different options on how to proceed forward and everything seemed to get stalled out. The pressing question from the previous letter would be about the "Fourth" bullet/question. We provided our executed letter of credit and that was accepted for the grant execution. Do we need to actually draw off of that line of credit, segregate it into different bank accounts, and incur interest on those funds; or is the line of credit for our matching requirements still acceptable? It has not been utilized at this point and still has full funds available. I just didn't see the need to pay interest on a line that is readily available if not needed.

Brandon –

Sorry I missed your call. I received your voicemail and wanted to inquire on the nature of the call. I'd like to ensure that I have the appropriate staff available to answer your questions.

Sincerely,

George
